Workshop
The contribution of public transport to the competitiveness of cities
[S2]
[International Association of Public Transport (UITP)]

By directly contributing to the competitiveness of cities, public transport enables savings and creates value for individuals, businesses and public authorities, notably through higher tax revenues. Public transport also helps leverage private investment in the city. When public transport schemes are integrated into economic development strategies – urban development and housing policies, education and employment strategies, as well as the tourism sector – cities are able to truly flourish.

- Ilmar Reepalu, Former Mayor of Malmö, Vice President of Swedish Association of Local Authorities and Regions (SALAR), Spokesperson on Urban policies of CEMR

Permanent Working Platform
Co-creating the city - Right to the Sustainable City
[S5]

This Permanent Working Platform dedicated to the Right to the City aims at creating a guide of strategies for its implementation, based on practices and experiences that civil society is pursuing in cities. It is complementary to the Policy Dialogue on the Right to the City. How do we promote the Right to the City in the policies of local governments? In UCLG we believe that the Right to the City is a wager which has to articulate the new governance necessary to achieve the kind of society that can face the uncertain future challenges and achieve the development goals agreed jointly in the 2030 Agenda.

The first session will address the right to the sustainable city. The proposals for remunicipalization of sanitation services in some Spanish cities and even the establishment of clean energy entreprises show the challenges that local governments need to face with regards to sustainability.

At the same time, the "caring city" model broadens the sustainability concept, positioning "life" and the conditions that sustain it at the center of public policy. Furthermore, the right to the sustainable city interacts with social economy, commons management, collaborative production models in cities, and changes in consumption patterns. The right to the sustainable city guarantees the social function of tenure, land and

Metropolis Secretaries General Meeting
[S6]
(By invitation)

Metropolis, World Association of the Major Metropolises, is the largest association gathering the governments of major cities all over the world. As part of the global movement that advocates for democratic local self-government, Metropolis recognizes that local governments are the key actors to respond to the urban challenges of our century.
Created in 1985, Metropolis currently represents the authorities of 137 great cities and metropolitan areas in Africa, the Americas & the Caribbean, Asia & the Pacific, and Europe. Metropolis is as well the metropolitan section of United Cities and Local Governments (UCLG).

Elevator Pitch
Inclusive and Transparent City Development: To Share Seoul's Policies and Best Practices
[Network Hub]

Led by the Sustainable Development Goals and the New Urban Agenda, global society has turned its focus to promoting inclusive cities. In this worldwide trend, Seoul will present its "Inclusive City Policy", focusing on housing and urban regeneration, as well as its innovative e-government system for transparent public construction management. More concretely, the session will debate the following best practices as examples of inclusive and transparent urban development policies: Seoul's public rental housing expansion; Seoul's urban restoration and vitalization strategy; Transparency through the "Clean Construction System" (CCS) for public construction management; Creating a network supporting policy exchanges to promote shared prosperity for world cities.

Organizers:
- Seoul Metropolitan Government
- UNDP Seoul Policy Centre
- Seoul Housing Corporation

Community Forum – Local government associations – Discussion among Presidents on main trends and developments in their LGAs and surroundings
[C1]
[UCLG Committee on Development Cooperation and City Diplomacy (DCCD), UCLG Working Group on Capacity and Institution Building (CIB)]

Partners:
- Association of Netherlands Municipalities (VNG) and VNG International
- Federation of Canadian Municipalities (FCM)

The Community Forum of Local Governments Associations will be divided in two dedicated sessions: one for exchange among CEOs representing LGAs and the other one for dialogue among Presidents of LGAs. The idea is to allow participants to meet their counterparts to broaden their own network and to hear about different realities, including relations with other stakeholders, advocacy approaches, the integration of international networks into their domestic agenda, as well as to set out the priorities for the World Organization.

1st segment: Discussion among Presidents on main trends and developments in their LGAs and surroundings

- Edwin Escobar, President of Confederation of Associations of Municipalities of Central America and the Caribbean (CAMCAYA), President of National Association of Municipalities of Guatemala (ANAM)
- Clark Somerville, President of Federation of Canadian Municipalities (FCM)
- Rafael Hidalgo, President of Dominican Federation of Municipalities (FEDOMU)

Cities: the future of humane, evidence-based and effective drug policies
[S2]
[Global Commission on Drug Policy]

Cities have been and will continue to be innovation hubs for social development policies, including drug policy reform such as decriminalization of personal use of drugs and small-scale cultivation by municipal police, citizen security initiatives and harm reduction programs. Harnessing the power of cities and local government in positive change, including reducing inequality, and supporting economic and educational opportunities will be crucial in attaining the Sustainable Development Goals.
Since 2011, the Global Commission on Drug Policy has been a key reference for drug policy on a local, national, regional and international level.
This session aims to attract current city and local government officials so that they can better understand their capacity in addressing drug use, trafficking and production, as well as providing concrete lessons learned.
The Global Commission will also be discussing its local cities initiative at this event, during which specific cities will be asked to commit to implementing effective decriminalization and harm reduction programs on the local level.

Co-creating the city - Right to the Living City
[S5]

The living city, based on neighborhood and territorial human networks, has become crucial for many local governments and urban social movements. The living city, permeated at the same time by the struggle for human rights and the right to decent housing, has become one of the most inspiring narratives to advocate against gentrification processes, real estate speculation and public spaces privatization.

Workshop
Connect
[S6]
[Platforma]

The objective of the CONNECT Mechanism is to facilitate effective transfer of specific local and regional government know-how, in particular via brokering, which will allow local and regional governments in partner countries (the demand side) to find available expertise in European countries and beyond (the supply side), in order to contribute to capacity development. This workshop will shed light on the background and context of this initiative, highlight the next steps to be taken, as well as describe the relevance of the CONNECT Mechanism to the audience.

Culture 21 Lab: Operationalizing culture in sustainable cities
[Network Hub]
[UCLG Committee on Culture]

This session will showcase the Pilot Cities and the Leading Cities of the UCLG Committee on Culture. These programmes provide learning, capacity-building, political leadership and wide visibility to participant cities (local governments and urban actors). These cities are already operationalising "culture in sustainable cities". Key cities and key experts will be present. They will answer questions and comment the key aspects of the programme to other cities/actors.

Policy Dialogue – Stronger, more accountable local and regional governments

[S1]

The success of the SDGs and the New Urban Agenda will depend on effective, accountable and transparent institutions. That's why local democracy must be the foundation of both agendas. Because it is at local level, where government is closest to the people, that citizens engage with their institutions every day.

We want a world in which all local governments are equipped with the powers and resources necessary to respond to the needs and priorities of their communities. In which local democracy is made a reality through ongoing, effective citizen participation in decision-making. In which local budgets, procurement and hiring, and decision-making mechanisms are transparent. And in which citizens can hold local institutions accountable for their decisions. Elected local and regional leaders are uniquely placed to promote collaborative, participatory and integrated governance. This policy dialogue will explore how to empower local leaders to work with their communities to co-create their cities and territories.

the migration governance, as they implement local policies to ensure the social cohesion of their territory. Furthermore, the increasing urbanization of migration flows in the recent years implies new challenges for the strategic planning at urban areas level. Nevertheless, this issue could be tackled through innovative, inclusive and participative approach in order to turn migration into an opportunity for social and economic development at local level. At this regards, the workshop on Migration and Mobility will allow Local Authorities to share their specific experience and to generate a common reflection on our role as local governments in this field and also to take advantage of experiences and innovations of each other as a source of learning.

The "Lancet Series" on Urban Design, Transport and Population Health
[Network Hub]

Major global health challenges are being confronted in the 21st century, prompting calls to re-think approaches to disease prevention. City planning that reduces non-communicable diseases and road trauma, while managing rapid urbanisation is part of the solution. The Lancet series focuses on the health impact of city planning through transport mode options and choices. The three papers unravel the complexity of urban design, the transport system and population health and provide a paradigm shift in our approach to responding to the growing burden of chronic disease and injury in our cities. The series offers key recommendations that urban and transport planners and policymakers could implement to improve the health of urban populations.

Community Forum – Intermediary cities
[S1]

The Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs) call explicitly for role and functions of all types of cities to be more clearly defined, and for systems of cities to be managed more efficiently. These goals are vital for intermediary cities (i-cities), which support more than one-third of the world's urban population. In developed economies, while many i-cities are facing economic uncertainty, others have grown into dynamic actors of the new global economy. In most developing economies, on the other hand, i-cities are growing rapidly and facing significant development pressures from urbanization.

In all world regions, intermediary cities – despite their significant potential – are struggling to manage the impacts of global economic transformations and urban development, as well as to take advantage of their human scale to offer a better quality of life to their citizens. Their pivotal role in the achievement of more balanced and sustainable urbanization processes and the reduction of territorial inequalities requires, in particular, that i-cities are given more attention within the global debate towards the New Urban Agenda.

Mapping urban governance
[Network Hub]
[UN-Habitat Local Government and Decentralization Unit, LSE Cities, UCLG Committee on Decentralization and Local Self-Government]

The Urban Governance Survey is an initiative by LSE Cities, UN-Habitat and the UCLG Committee on Decentralization and Local-Self Government and supported by the MacArthur Foundation. These institutions have been working together since 2014 in an effort to identify trends in the way cities are governed. Local governments all around the world continue to face critical decisions about how to face current demands and plan for their immediate urban future in a situation where urbanization rates are influencing development dynamics on a global scale, posing unprecedented challenges for urban governance.

The session will be a perfect opportunity to present the results of the urban governance survey and the features and usefulness of the platform, as well as to offer a space for cities to engage and discuss about current urban governance trends and challenges.

Policy Dialogue – Culture as a dimension in urban transformation
[S1]
[UCLG Committee on Culture]

The function of culture as a pillar of sustainable development is increasingly recognized. This dialogue will discuss how heritage, creativity, diversity, cultural participation and the transmission of knowledge are instrumental to building people-centred societies. It will also explore the operational role played by cities and local governments within this context, and the need for them to be acknowledged in, and empowered by, the New Urban Agenda.

Community Forum – Metropolitan and peripheral cities
[S2]

The world is moving towards a "metropolitan age" characterized by large, growing urban agglomerations, with a complexity and diversity that are unprecedented for our civilizations. An emerging and more integrated global system of cities, megacities, urban regions and corridors is changing and re-shaping the global urban landscape and the future of our societies. There were just five mega-cities of more than 10 million inhabitants at the time of Habitat I in 1976. Today there are 31, three quarters of them in the global South. Many metropolitan areas host massive concentrations of wealth and offer promising opportunities for growth while, at the same time, denying or failing to ensure a number of fundamental rights, like decent housing and access to quality basic services. Many large cities aim to compete for growth and investment in a globalized world but, at the same time, are unable to effectively address their own inequalities, which entrench exclusion and marginality. Many areas that bear the promise of an improved quality of life are at risk by the irreversible depletion of their natural resources and life-support systems. However, if adequately empowered and managed, metropolitan areas are where many of the world's most pressing challenges can be addressed and solved.

Model city council
[S4]
[Platforma, University of Rosario]

Supporting:
- United Cities France (CUF)

International action by local governments is always subject to heavy political debate. What are the most innovative arguments in favor of engaging in decentralized cooperation? How do the arguments differ across the world?
10 students from Universidad del Rosario engage in a simulated council debate on an international partnership between the fictitious city of Plato de Forma and the equally fictitious city of Escuerra. Four fictitional political groups practice their arguments on each other – and on the participants of the Congress. The workshop is based on the Model UN, adapted to fit the reality of a local political council. Debates will be lively and you can participate by sharing your experience and give advice to these future decision makers.

Co-creating the city - Right to the City of Learning
[S5]

Professors and students are even and mutual learning among specialists and amateurs takes place when people meet in squares. At the same time, in the age of ubiquitous connectity, smartphones and proactive citizenship, any corner of a city can become a learning and exchange space.
The learning city, according to the definition of the urban planner Domenico di Siena, implies "shifting from models based on efficient goods and services production that oblige us to constantly move (and consume) to models based on information management and knowledge production (self-organization)". The "right to the city of learning" relies on the free access to and free movement of knowledge and culture.

Practical Sessions - The art of Strategic Facilitation

[S6]

Co-Organizers:
- Municipal Institute of Learning (MILE), eThekwini

Facilitation is essential for any learning event. Facilitators carry the responsibility to ensure that the audience, the methodology, and the speakers are linked together. In order to be efficient, facilitators need a series of soft skills to share observations, gather outcomes, plan and adjust the learning methodologies to meet the needs and achieve the expected results. For these reasons, this session will be a training workshop on "The Art of Strategic Facilitation". In this workshop participants will actively explore some of the essential skills for good facilitation. MILE will coordinate this workshop.

Policy Dialogue – Drive bottom-up national development
[S1]

Local and regional governments are strategic partners of national governments in driving national development from the bottom up, to redefine territorial development and build strong national systems of cities. Adequate national urban policies combined with a territorial approach to development are instrumental in driving a more balanced and powerful national development. To harness local potential, national governments must ensure an enabling environment in which local and regional governments can experiment, innovate, and tap on the resources and competitive advantages offered by their locations and populations.

Plenary - Links between the 2030 Agenda and the New Urban Agenda
[Grand Saloon]

Over the span of one year, the international community will have adopted three ambitious agendas; the 2030 Agenda, the Paris Agreement on Climate Change and, next October in Quito, the New Urban Agenda. Local and regional governments have strongly advocated for these agendas. In a fast-urbanizing world, they argued that the SDGs need to further take the urban and territorial dimensions of sustainable development into account – going well beyond Goal 11 – and that the New Urban Agenda should be fully embedded in the achievement of the SDGs and the Paris Agreement.
Local and regional governments have shown that they are essential for the achievement of these agendas but that their role need to be redefined to ensure adequate governance and follow-up at national and global levels.

Policy Dialogue - Territories to promote sustainable local economic and environmental policies
[S1]

This session will discuss how local governments can take a more active role in defining and driving the development of prosperous, inclusive and sustainable territories.
Cities and regions across the globe are leading the way in reducing their environmental footprints, greenhouse gas emissions and energy consumption, and working to promote the use of renewable energies and protect bio-diversity. Local governments are also collaborating internationally to set shared targets and to measure their progress in tackling climate change.

Subnational governments are also increasingly involved in local economic development. One of the key challenges for the future is link up the creation of decent jobs and poverty reduction with the quest for environmental sustainability. The use of new technologies and cultural initiatives to develop new patterns of production and consumption at local level will be a vital part of this process.

UCLG City of Bogotá Peace Prize Finals
[S3]

The UCLG City of Bogotá Peace Prize is a triennial award for (a coalition of) local governments that have implemented initiatives in conflict prevention, conflict resolution or peace building, that are proven to have had a significant positive impact. The prize aims to contribute to full acknowledgement of the important but often overlooked role of local governments as peace building actors, thus creating a more effective approach to conflict resolution.
Supported by UCLG and its members, the UCLG Peace Prize has been made possible by contributions, financial and in terms of content, by the City of Bogotá, the Provincial Council of Barcelona, the Dutch NGO PAX and VNG International, the international cooperation agency of the VNG.
The high-level jury of the UCLG City of Bogotá Peace Prize has selected the five finalists for the prize. In this session, these finalists will present their initiatives for the jury and audience. The jury will decide on the winner after the session and the prize will be awarded during the General Assembly on 14 October.

Territorial governance for food security
[S4]
[Association of Regions of France (ARF), UCLG Forum of Regions]

The workshop aims to review how to bring back territorial development at the heart of the food system evolution and also how to implement at the local level the SDG 2 on food security.
The food transition that regional leaders hope relies on two transformations highly correlated: the relocation of production and the food consumption as well as the development of a social, environmental and cultural responsibility of actors from the agro-food chain.
The complementarity between the urban and the rural can be achieved by considering the agricultural land as a creator of economic activities and jobs, but also as a factor of positive social and environmental externalities. This is one of the central elements that constitutes cities' food policies and in the same line, the quality of life of their inhabitants.

have committed to accelerate, focus and scale up their AIDS responses. Integrating the HIV response into the Sustainable Development agenda provides further opportunity to ensure better health, reduce inequality, advance human rights, and promote inclusive and equitable societies.

Many cities, with their unique understanding of the socio-cultural differences and vulnerabilities of their populations, are also in a position to demonstrate pillars of the New Urban Agenda in action by supporting and strengthening HIV prevention services and responding to the stigma and discrimination of people most affected by HIV and AIDS. Co-creating the city - Right to the Diverse City
[S5]

The right to the diverse city lays firstly on the responsible and shared management of the cultural commons. Yet, it also refers to three different issues: diversity, remembrance/heritage and creativity. Public policies for diverse cities also need to address a key consideration: the exercise of cultural rights and the access to culture. The presence of cultural manifestations accessible to everyone, either in public spaces or facilities (libraries, halls, etc.), stand for a traditional approach of it. The new responsibility of public authorities implies highlighting, facilitating and acknowledging autonomous cultural manifestations in cities. In this way, interculturality can become a tool and place for dialogue among the different cultures and cultural manifestations that inhabit the city, and public authorities can shift its logics and interact with "the commons".

Community Forum – Locally elected women
[S2]
[UCLG Standing Committee on Gender Equality]

One of UCLG's most valuable functions as a global network is its ability to bring together locally elected leaders from across the world to share their challenges, experiences and knowledge. This is particularly true in the case of women, who are still vastly underrepresented; it is estimated that women make up fewer than 20% of councillors and just 5% of mayors worldwide. UCLG hopes its 2016-2019 mandate will be a tipping point for women presence in the organization and to its work fostering women participation across the world.
There has never been a more exciting time to bring together locally elected women from across the world. All women and girls in our cities and territories must be empowered to participate in economic, cultural and political life. Female empowerment is both a goal and a means of sustainable urban development and integrating a gender perspective into all local policymaking is essential to the achievement of SDG 5 and the New Urban Agenda.

The thematic session will explore the value of City-to-City cooperation linked to the challenges of the SDG 8. City to city cooperation has been increasingly linked to, and has benefited from the practice of South-South and triangular cooperation as an innovative means to develop local solutions to often global issues. SSTC constitutes an exchange among equals, the identification of innovative practices, and promotes collaborative initiatives at the national, regional, and interregional levels.
Participants will work on topics related to local economic development and decent work on which they have already engaged or wish to engage in the future. They will be asked to identify synergies and possible linkages in order to reinforce City to city cooperation on decent work.
A final debate, building on the discussions, will help examine potential topics and partners.

Cities in Crisis
[S2]
[UCLG Task Force for Prevention and Territorial Management of Crises, United Cities France (CUF)]

This workshop will build on the key challenges and recommendations outlined by UCLG Task Force during the World Humanitarian Summit in May 2016 and follow the Sendai framework.

The accelerating trend of urbanization is paralleled by an increasing number of crisis-affected populations residing in cities. By 2050 over 70% of the global population will live in urban areas. Cities and their inhabitants can be directly impacted by natural disasters or conflicts; they can also become a safe haven for forcibly displaced populations. Either way, cities are profoundly affected by crisis and the resulting pressure and competition over scarcer services, housing and livelihoods opportunities.

Reinforcing local governments role in all stages of crisis management will enable a continuum between emergency relief and reconstruction planning toward sustainable development. It will ensure the sustainability of the urban planning; help to assess and plan to reduce vulnerability; and foster the development of resilient territories.

- UCLG Committee on Urban Strategic Planning (CUSP)

The session on public space links to the Learning Agenda directly as the information influencing the content - namely the Policy Framework - was developed using some of the material obtained during Learning Exchanges. This session provides an opportunity to highlight the importance of learning exchanges and to showcase how learning can be used to influence and shape policy development at the local level.

The thematic session on Public Space will be designed using a modified version of the world cafe methodology. For the Public Space workshop we want to develop together with all co-organizers a common question related to the importance of learning in relation to the SDG 11 in particular public space. All co-organizers will have time to present and explore more concrete questions related to learning and Public Space as a key lever for urban development.

Every two years, cities and regions are invited to participate in the Guangzhou International Award for Urban Innovation, and this year the number of applications has reached a new high with over 400 initiatives from more than 200 cities from all corners of the world. As urban areas continue to grow, cities around the world face new challenges, from improving their infrastructure to dealing with population growth and climate change. These challenges need to be tackled with innovative approaches to allow us to adapt and to prosper. Learning from each other provides one of the best ways to inspire each other to adopt and adapt new policies, strategies, business models and partnerships to improve the quality of life and resiliency of our communities. This workshop draws on the experience of panelists that are involved in urban innovation and will present and discuss what makes urban innovation successful.

Co-creating the city - Right to the Fair City
[S5]

Human rights respect and protection is a cross-cutting issue in several public policies at local level. The right to a fair city pays special attention to gender and equality. At the same time, in the digital era, the right to privacy guides the fight for human rights by many movements in fields such as "human right by design" platforms or problems such as videosurveillance by public WIFI devices.
Furthermore, the income redistribution mechanisms and the polycentrism of cities are key to shed light on the territorial debate and fight against the socio-spatial segregation resulting from the market-based processes that build cities. A decentralized approach to put resources and decisión-making mechanisms in the popular peripheries is essential to address "the commons" and guarantee the fulfilment of human rights.

GOLD Launch
[S1/S2/S3/S4]

Since the publication of its first edition in 2008 (GOLD I), the Global Report on Local Democracy and Decentralization (GOLD) has become an international benchmark in the analysis of local governments worldwide.
The focus of the GOLD IV report is to place local and regional authorities at the centre of the New Urban Agenda, strengthening the links with the 2030 Agenda and the Paris Agreement, translating its normative horizon into practical policies that will transform human settlements with the involvement of citizens and communities. With this purpose, the analysis presented in this Report moves away from traditional sectoral approaches, favouring, instead, a broader territorial approach that builds on the vision, experiences and practices of local and regional leaders in charge of metropolises, intermediary cities, small towns and regions.
GOLD IV presents the foundation of the Global Agenda of Local and Regional Governments for the coming decade, a set of policy recommendations for all actors and stakeholders in the local and regional governance system, drawn from the vision of local and regional leaders, practitioners and experts. This agenda for metropolises, cities and territories is UCLG's contribution to the global debate, and an invitation to take the next step: fostering alliances based on strong policies and actions to achieve prosperous, inclusive, safe, resilient and sustainable cities and territories.
